Definition of Essential Services (see pg. 1)

Services that ensure the health, safety, and stability of a person. This includes a range of services, including:

- Medication management
- Clinical supports (including behavioral supports) and/or nursing services
- Securing food
- Independent and daily living supports
- Obtaining essential home supplies related to health and sanitation
- Ensuring human contact
- Essential medical care

Factors that may indicate the need for essential services:

- Acute experiences are significantly impacting the person's well-being
- They require social and/or emotional support to maintain stability and/or prevent a crisis
- There is concern of suicide or risk of dangerous behavior
- They are having difficulty securing basic needs
- They require medication support
- They require support/assistance to access critical medical care from non-HCRS providers
- They were recently hospitalized
- They are at risk of losing their home/home placement
- Remote services will not adequately meet their needs
